Written Questions must be received 2 weeks before a meeting of the Panel and the Commissioner or Panel Chairman is invited to provide a response by noon of the day before the meeting.

Questions that relate to operational matters of Sussex Police will be passed to a relevant officer at Sussex Police for a response and a brief summary of the question will be provided below. For the current meeting three questions have been received for a response by the Commissioner.

For non-emergency calls you are advised to dial 084560 70 999 which asks you to dial one of two extensions neither of which have I ever managed to get an answer on so presumably the offices are unmanned. If you dial 101 you are kept pushing buttons and listening to statements for 1 and a half minutes before being told that you are being put in a queue and being charged 15 pence for the call. I wished to report an obviously confused, elderly man with every symptom of dementia wandering round Montague Street on	In an emergency you should always dial 999. For non-emergencies dial 101. Calls to this number cost a maximum of 15p for the duration, whether you are calling from a landline or mobile phone. There is an alternative local number of 01273 470101 which circumvents the national 101 switchboard number by diverting directly to the Sussex Police switchboard. These calls are charged at local rates which means that if you're calling from a landline and have an inclusive package, it may be free of charge. The local number is particularly helpful for callers trying to contact Sussex Police from a different part of the country.

Having been messed about only to be told I was being charged for the call and was to be put in a queue I gave up.

It is ridiculous that there is no straightforward way to contact the police in Worthing other than by dialling 999.

Questioner – Mr Smewing, Worthing

In follow up to the response provided, Mr Smewing submitted the following supplementary point:

The mystery is how did the people who called and were answered within 30 seconds get past the push button time which took me 1 minute 26 seconds before being passed on to other departments. The time it took me was logged on my mobile phone so I know exactly how long I was pushing buttons and listening to unnecessary (to me) waffle.

experiencing delays in their calls being answered when phoning the 101 non-emergency number. Sussex Police apologise for any frustration and inconvenience caused by this and remain committed to tackling this issue and to minimise the impact on public service.

A summary of the non-emergency calls received by the Switchboard and the Contact and Command Centre and the average answering times for each are detailed below:

Sussex Police received 866,447 calls to the non-emergency number across the performance plan year 2012/2013. 96% of these calls were answered initially within 30 seconds by the switchboard team, of which 556,084 were transferred to the contact centre. Of those calls transferred, 74% were answered within 60 seconds, with an average wait time of 59 seconds.

2013/2014

Sussex Police received 753,535 calls to the non-emergency number across the performance plan year 2013/2014. 96% of these calls were answered initially within 30 seconds by the switchboard team, of which 563,297 were transferred to the contact centre. Of those calls transferred, 57% were answered within 60 seconds, with an average wait time of 2 minutes and 15 seconds.

2014/2015 (to the end of January 2015)

Sussex Police has received 609,406 calls to the non-emergency number across the performance plan year to date. 91% of these calls were answered initially within 30 seconds by the switchboard team, of which 419,300 were transferred to the contact centre. Of those calls transferred, 59%% were answered within 60 seconds, with an average wait time of 2 minutes and 20 seconds.

26 March 2015	How has the effectiveness and efficiency of the Sussex Police been improved as the result of the appointment of Ms Bourne as Police & Crime Commissioner? Questioner – Mr Taylor, Lewes	My achievements, in terms of improving the effectiveness and efficiencies of Sussex Police, can be viewed in the "Two Years On" section at the front of my Police & Crime Plan (pages 4-6). These are presented under each of the four priority areas. Achievements have also been presented to the Panel in the Half-Year Monitoring Reports for 2013/2014 (11 October 2013) and 2014/2015 (10 October 2014) and in the Annual Report for 2013/2014 (27 June 2014). The Annual Report for 2014/2015 will be presented to the Panel at the meeting on 3 July 2015. I would also be happy to add you to the distribution list for my weekly newsletter which provides further detail regarding achievements as and when they are realised.
30 March 2015	Although aware of the budgetary pressures we are all under what is the justification for the decision to reduce the number of PCSOs so dramatically - 39% meaning a drop from 347 to 210 - when the original reason for their placement particularly in rural villages, and elsewhere, was to give the police a 'face' in the countryside whilst at the same time making a real contribution in reducing the serious fear of crime? This surely cannot be the signal we should be sending out to the public? Questioner – Mr Patten, Hastings	In order to facilitate the provision of effective local policing services to the public, within reduced budgets, the Chief Constable has developed the Sussex Local Policing Model. This model is an innovative approach and will enable Sussex Police to operate more efficiently in the future by responding to incidents based on threat, risk and harm. I will not comment on the operational detail of the Local Policing Plan. However, it is important to remember what the police are actually here for and to recognise where their physical presence makes a difference. Neighbourhood policing in Sussex has remained broadly the same for the last 15 years and we now need a model that meets the demands of modern-day policing and the policing challenges of the 21 st century. Demands on the frontline are changing and policing needs to adapt accordingly. It is not only uniformed police officers on the beat but criminal assets through financial investigations and solve crimes through high-tech or forensic research. These often unseen areas are a crucial part of our "frontline" and where the Chief Constable and I have sought further investment to strengthen the Force's capability and capacity.

There will be changes that I know some residents may not feel comfortable with straight away. That is why I will be watching closely – and continuing to engage directly with members of the public – to ensure these changes are clearly communicated and understood. This is a long-term, five-year plan. The new Sussex Local Policing Model – and the changes within it – will not be rolled out overnight. I will be asking partners and the public to feedback their comments and concerns to me at every stage.

We all recognise that the police funding challenge is not unique. Every part of the public sector is making fundamental changes to the way services are delivered and this, in turn, is driving reform. Police forces are having to improve and change in order to continue to provide an effective service for local people. They have to make better use of their resources, reduce demand by intervening earlier and work in a more efficient way with other services and the public.

Since 2010, Sussex Police has already reduced spending by £50 million and over the next four years it needs to reduce spending by a further £57 million. With around 80% of policing funding going towards officer and staff costs it is inevitable that we will, over time, see people leave and not be replaced.

My on-going challenge to the Chief Constable will be that his new model must maintain public confidence and reassurance. This is a long term plan and my commitment to residents in Sussex is that I will continue to provide constructive challenge, representing their interests and concerns throughout.
